
Carrot juice and skin discoloration....

Posted by Lynvac - 2009/01/11 23:40

I'm really trying to unleash the sludge in my liver and have been 80-90% raw for 2 years already.

I'm wondering if the skin discoloration from raw carrot juice is worrisome? I have read both sides of the fence in this regard and am wondering which side is valid. I have normal liver enzyme values but they are high normals.

Is it true that the skin changes are from stagnant bile being released, or is it an overabundance of vitamin A? Any help is appreciated...Lyn

Some American students get help with their schoolwork from online companies whose teachers may be in another country.

One example is Career Launcher India Limited. It provides mathematics help through online tutoring companies. The student in the United States and the teacher in India talk to each other as they work out math problems. The teachers can explain ideas by drawing on the screen so the student can see how the answer develops.

It charges American students about twenty dollars an hour. Growing Stars is expanding into Canada, Britain and Australia. It gives each student a test to find out what he or she knows and does not know. Then an academic director creates a personal learning program for each student. And the company e-mails progress reports to the children's parents.

Smart Thinking in Washington, D.C., has tutors in the United States, South Africa, the Philippines, India and Chile. But it only permits those in the United States to provide help with English.

Some education experts are concerned about the people in India helping American children with American English. They also have concerns about the quality of other instruction offered by such programs. The companies say their teachers are professionals who know the differences between British and American English. The companies say they could not operate if the students and their parents were not satisfied with the service.
